" Developing people as part of an overall human resource strategy means the skillful provision and organisation of learning experiences, primarily but not exclusively in the workplace, in order that business goals and organisational growth can be achieved.

Such development must be aligned with the organisation's vision and longer-term goals in order that, through enhancing the skills, knowledge, learning and innovative capability of people of every level, the organisation as well as the individual can prosper."

— Rosemary Harrison, Employee Development, Uni. Press.
